IDE: delphi 23 Apr 2013 20:26:31 +0000This is a delphi version of original tool which can be found here: Using this tool has some limitations (it has different set of functions) because it should be updated.

In this version:

- Support for iOS and Android

- Add more functions of "GetStatus", "ScheduleNextDrive", "OpenFileSize" so is safer to use.

- Better error handling.(usually with Delphi you will never get a error in one of these function but if it will be, it's not so good, but it's better than nothing)

- If you need to change color of buttons, text or anything, when you use delphi XE7 and later, you should use overlay, because delphi XE7 and later doesn't have all the components needed for the overlay. But if you're

ing a 1000 miles each way from the Middle of Nowhere Month: May 2014 Southern California is known as the travel and tourism capital of the nation for a reason. If you love the beach, there are plenty of ways to get there. One of the faster ways would be a road trip out West. Though plans to make this journey get the job done depend on your luck. If you're picking your route with an eye to stranded vehicles then it's best to head for a destination that can be reached conveniently. A safe option would be San Francisco, which has always been popular for tourists, even back to the time when cars were first introduced to the Pacific coast. While it's probably impossible to stand in the left lane in order to swim on the Haight Street, a few miles to its south is the Pacific Ocean. It's a nice option to take a drive to the beach and catch some much needed air off the sparkling sand. Strange and unusual lava flows are why you'll find yourself traveling West on the highways of California. The prettiest of the batch is a two miles section of land that alternates between lava and dirt, in a half-meteor crater. The round steel lake in the center of it all retains a vibrant orange hue and is dubbed, aptly, Lake Fireball because of its power. Oregon has seen some crazy meteorological events, and has been fairly lit up recently by said events. When there's a collapse in the ground, coupled with a powerful blast, you're looking at something magnified. This is one of the reasons why there is a road that cuts through the center of this weird subdivision. Another reason for it being that this is homes to Fort Rock, located on top of a large lava field that is still active and vertical. It's considered a National Monument and is a showcase of alien earth lifeforms like pumice and lava tubes. If you're lucky enough to get stranded in a place like Nogales or Phoenix, Arizona are not all that great options due to hooligans roaming the roads. Then again, if you're without a car, you're an easy target for them; all you need to do is flash some cash, and they'll likely take you for a ride. This is one reason why I love long road trips - the view is one of uninterrupted peace, and the landscape is
